REMEMBERING TUCSON

GIFFORDS VISITS CITY ONE YEAR AFTER SHOOTING

Reuters

TUCSON, Ariz. Bells rang across Tucson early Sunday marking the exact time last year the city was rocked by a deadly shooting spree that left U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords gravely wounded and six people killed.

The bells at 10:11 a.m., the moment of the Jan. 8, 2011, shooting, opened a day of remembrance events for survivors and Tucson residents across the city.

Giffords, an Arizona Democrat, made a surprise visit late Saturday to the grocery store where a pistol-wielding gunman pumped bullet after bullet into a crowd gathered for her congressional outreach meeting a year ago.

The gunfire struck and killed six people and wounded 13 others, including Giffords, who was shot through the head and has been recovering since at a Houston hospital.

About 200 people gathered at an Anglican church in north Tucson near the scene of the shooting for a service that remembered victims.

"When you think on it, it's a healing moment," said Dick Guthrie, a longtime congregant who said he had known Giffords since she was a teenager.

"I hope she continues to improve," he added.

Gary Huckleberry, whose daughter witnessed the shooting and suffered trauma, said he found the service healing.

"A lot of us have come a long way since that date a year ago. For some people it will take much more time to get over it, but having this service ... was healing," he said.

While the bells rang slowly, echoing

WHAT ABOUT THE SHOOTER?

College dropout Jared Loughner, 23, was arrested at the scene of the shooting and charged with crimes including attempting to assassinate Giffords. He pleaded not guilty. Found mentally unfit to stand trial, he is being treated in a federal prison hospital in Missouri.

through the empty downtown streets, a crowd of about 300 people attended a morning Mass at St. Augustine Cathedral. It was the same spot where U.S. District Judge John Roll, Giffords' friend who was killed in the attack last year, attended lunchtime Mass every day.

In a call to Giffords, President Obama praised her courage and determination in her recovery and told her she was "an inspiration to his family and Americans across the country," the White House said.

Surprise visits mark anniversary

Reuters

TUCSON, Ariz. Accompanied by her husband, retired astronaut Mark Kelly, U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords made several unannounced visits around Tucson on Saturday, including the stop at the Safeway store she was shot one year ago.

"Gabby just visited the Safeway for the 1st time since 1/8/11," Kelly tweeted.

"It's been a tough year, but we're lucky to have so many people standing w/us," he added.

Earlier in the day, Giffords hiked outside Tucson on a desert trail named for her slain aide, Gabe Zimmerman, and visited University of Arizona Medical Center staff who treated her and others for bullet wounds.

"I think it's going to be a very cathartic weekend for all of us here in Tucson to see her in her hometown," said Daniel Hernandez, an intern at Giffords' office credited with saving her life as she lay in a pool of her own blood in the Safeway parking lot.

Giffords was scheduled to attend a candlelight vigil at the University of Arizona on Sunday evening with her husband.

The event was expected to draw thousands of Tucson residents, a city of 520,000 people that many describe as a "small big town."

An intervention for Ron Paul fans

Stephen Markley
» redeye@tribune.com

With the Republican primary season under way, it's time for an intervention for my fellow young people who have decided to support the cult of personality that is Ron Paul.

Once considered a curiosity, Paul's most radical views have increasingly edged into the mainstream in a pathetic Republican field. Even if, like me, you sympathize with his opinions that we should legalize most drugs and not immediately start a war with Iran, these "youth-popular" stances have allowed him too much cover for his disturbing economic and domestic policy positions.

Here's a hint about picking your political icons: Don't trust anyone who promises something along the lines of "If we do X, then we'll have Utopia."

Yet the frequent refrain I'll now give to my 20-something Paul-supporting straw man goes like this: "I'm with Ron Paul. Get the government out of everything."

All righty, Straw Man, fair enough—let's unpack that. We don't have the space here to go into all the crazy regressive policies that entails, so let's try easy-to-understand examples.

Paul promises to cut $1 trillion his first year in office. What this means—as any economist outside of maybe the Heritage Foundation will tell you—is the immediate triggering of a depression. Not this pantywaist Great Recession we've all been muddling through since 2007—a full-blown depression.

If to achieve this $1 trillion cut you want to eliminate five departments of government, as Paul does, it's important to understand that they do stuff people truly depend on—including you, Straw Man!

For instance, Paul wants to eliminate the Commerce Department, under whose auspices operates the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers, which oversees the assignment of domain names and Web addresses. Currently, Commerce may have to stop ICANN from rapidly expanding top-level domain names beyond .com, .net and a handful of others and creating chaos online. Or maybe it's OK if there's no oversight of ICANN and we can have 34,000 www.ronpaul websites leading to crush porn.

Ron Paul

Or take the Energy Department—also on Paul's list for elimination—in which resides much of the government's knowledge on nuclear terrorism. Presumably, Straw Man, it's in your interest that a terrorist group does not detonate a nuclear weapon in Chicago, yet I found no Paul-endorsed free market explanation for why Pepsi would want to take care of that for us.

The greatest failure of Paul's philosophy, however, comes from his laughable environmental views. Because the costs of pollution are always externalized in ways not apparent to the market, keeping arsenic out of our water and mercury out of our brains can really only come from democratically organized people (otherwise known as "the government").

My regret is that at age 76, Paul probably will not live to see the free market's Great Failure, climate change, transform his home state of Texas into a permanent dustbowl, as many scientists now virtually guarantee it will.

Basically, Straw Man, the idea that unregulated markets don't create bad actors, fueled by greed or their own pursuit of power, who can engage in perfidy commensurate or greater than any government's reflects a lack of critical thinking bordering on delusion.

If Paul becomes president, you can find more on this at my website, ronpaul.qom.

DIY DINING

If you've broiled, baked, braised or battered anything recently, you're not alone—Millennials are really getting cookin'

By Georgia Garvey

REDEYE

Eric Salinas swirls a pat of butter into a pan of sizzling green apples, brown sugar and apple juice. The fat glistens, creating the perfect sauce to go with a bone-in pork loin roasting in the oven. Golden-brown squash cools on the counter.

You'd think Salinas was showing off his cooking chops on TV alongside chef Alton Brown, but in reality the 25-year-old is whipping up a master meal in his North Park kitchen. The studio audience consists of his mom and girlfriend, eagerly awaiting dinner in the living room.

"They're my favorite people to cook for," he said. Plus, "I love to eat."

It's a watershed moment for cooking in general, and home cooks like Salinas are just part of the new developments. With Chicago chefs making names for themselves in hit shows such as "Top Chef" and restaurants like Grant Achatz's high-tech fantasy Alinea snagging Michelin honors, the city is increasingly on the culinary landscape. Add to that at-home chefs taking their cues from cultural icons—in a survey by market research company Mintel, about one in four Millennials said they "love cooking"—and you have a perfect storm of cooking activity.

"Being a cooking enthusiast in general has gotten more mainstream," said Kingsley Shannon, senior brand manager at high-end cookware company Calphalon. She said 20-somethings love food that's as diverse and unusual as they are. They've grown up trying different kinds of food, traveling and going out to eat more than their predecessors. "That has definitely contributed to that group maybe latching onto food."

The reasons people cook at home are as varied as the reasons we eat, but there are some key motivators for the at-home chef, according to the 2011 Kitchen Audit by NPD Group, a marketing firm that has tracked food buying and cooking for more than 30 years. The survey showed most people cook at home because it's healthy—and sometimes can be cheaper.

Over the years, Millennials also have been looking for ways to change the at-home meal from something totally standard into a restaurant-worthy meal, experts say. And Shannon said Millennials are starting to cook the kinds of food they like to eat: ethnic and experimental.

"We want to eat, that's not going to change," said Harry Balzer, chief industry analyst for the NPD Group, who

TV DINNERS

Culinary stars have always taken to the airwaves to show their talent—people like Rachael Ray, Graham Kerr and Emeril Lagasse wouldn't be household names if it weren't for those who came before them.

But the new generation of cooking shows—and the kitchen masters who inhabit them—continue to be hot properties on cable and network programming. According to TV ratings from zap2it, almost 1.7 million people watched the Dec. 7 episode of "Top Chef" and more than 6 million watched the season finale of "Hell's Kitchen."

So who are the hot TV chefs on the air now, ones who might be 2012's Julia Child or Jeff "The Frugal Gourmet" Smith? RedEye serves up a heaping helping of some of the more visible culinary artists on the small screen. G.G.

their first ingredient.

"Top Chef"

and generally, food that could be featured in "This Is Why You're Fat."

"Everyday Italian,"
"Giada's Weekend Getaways"

Specialty: Pronouncing Italian ingredients like "prosciutto" and "spaghetti" in really annoying ways.

Known for: Being hot, cooking food that she does not appear to be eating much of.

Rick Bayless

"Mexico: One Plate At A Time"

Specialty: Mexican food, Mexican ingredients, Mexican drinks. Basically, being more Mexican than Mexico.

Known for: Being chef and owner of Frontera Grill, Topolobampo and Xoco restaurants in Chicago, also for being sportswriter and commentator Skip Bayless' brother (OK, not so much the last one).

names Italian and Mexican foods as the new staples of the American diet. Part of the reason for that cultural shift is the one-dish meals common in those cuisines. "We're looking for ways to still have a full meal but, can we just make one item?"

Beyond the economic benefits, cooking (and sharing that food) can be fun. You invite your friends over, pop open a nice bottle of pinot noir and enjoy something home-cooked. It's expressive and artistic.

"For [Millennials], it's not just creating a meal to eat," said Fiona O'Donnell, senior analyst for lifestyles and leisure at Chicago-based Mintel. The under-30 crowds "look at cooking like an act of self-creation."

The creation gets artistic for cooks like Salinas, who's starting a food blog and hopes to begin hosting "tasting menu" dinners, where friends will chip in for the grocery bill and he'll do all the cooking.

He's also doing beer-and-chocolate tastings with his girlfriend. Salinas cooks full meals about five days a week, he said, and names a roast chicken inspired by chef Thomas Keller as one of his go-to dishes. He used to watch the Food Network religiously, he said, when he first learned how to cook, and picked up tricks and techniques from shows such as "Iron Chef" and "No Reservations."

"It's awesome," said Erica Ochoa, Salinas' girlfriend, about his cooking. "It's only 2 o'clock and he's already calling me and telling me what he's gonna make for dinner."

Most home cooks aren't quite as serious as Salinas, though. They just want to get food on the table quickly and cheaply and they want it to taste good. That's not out of the question—if they get some help.

Cooking schools across Chicago meet the needs of the home cook, and culinary programs like Kendall College's train would-be professionals who want to get degrees in cooking. Schools like The Chopping Block give Chicagoans with more modest goals a way to learn techniques and dishes they can use at home.

"Most of what we do here is not rocket science," Michele Glancey, chef instructor at the Chopping Block, told students during a recent class. "People who swear up and down that they're not cooks, those guys and gals do better. ... They just start to cook intuitively."

"I'm cooking because I know what goes into the dish," said Brian McKee, 38, of Lakeview, while acknowledging that "it's not always cheaper, it's not always cost efficient."

Salinas first started cooking after his mother got sick, but the get-the-food-on-the-table mentality eventually shifted into a love of the artistic side.

"I enjoy the gratification," he said, adding that he hasn't gotten tired of cooking yet. "I haven't hit that point. I hope I don't."

1 Arabs urge Syria to halt violence

The Arab League urged the Syrian government on Sunday to stop its violence against protesters (above) and allow Arab monitors to work more independently, but stopped short of asking for United Nations experts to bolster its mission.

The remains of a young woman found on the British royal estate of Sandringham are those of a missing 17-year-old girl who had been reported missing in August from her home about 20 miles away, police said Sunday.

Next big thing in tech is ...

... not to be found at 2012 electronics show

6 As the Consumer Electronics Show kicks off, paper-thin TVs, feather-light laptops and thousands of humming doodads of every hue are filling up more than 30 football fields' worth of Las Vegas convention space.

But if you're looking for a device with the potential to instantly change your life, your best bet might be across the street at the slot machines.

The world's largest personal technology convention, which starts Monday, often sets the tone for the year in gadgetry. The technologies that capture the CES buzz often go on to become top sellers—such as tablet computers last year or high-definition TVs before that.

This year, though, the Next Big Thing remains elusive. Despite what is expected to be a record number of exhibitors and attendees, many analysts agree that no single device or technology has emerged to define the show.

The show's organizers expect nearly 2,700 exhibitors and more than 150,000 attendees, the highest since 2006, a surge that reflects renewed consumer spending on gadgets and mobile devices.

But with a dearth of high-profile product announcements, analysts say CES could end up being a sea of familiar looking devices: mainly big-screen TVs, stereo systems and a variety of quirky prototypes and accessories.

WHAT ABOUT APPLE?

The show will feature an 80,000-square-foot area called the iLounge that will feature "all things iPod, iPhone, iPad and beyond." But you won't find a single Apple product there.

THE DIGIT

40+

More than 40 candidates are on the New Hampshire primary ballot this year, including Vermin Supreme, who wears a boot for a hat and refers to himself as a wizard. New Hampshire, where candidates are required to do nothing more than fill out a form and pay $1,000 to sign up, typically attracts a wide range of candidates.

N.Y. GIANTS 24, ATLANTA 2

Eli Manning threw three touchdown passes, including a pair to Hakeem Nicks, and his defense did the rest as the Giants churned out a 24-2 victory over the Atlanta Falcons in an NFC wild-card game Sunday. SPORTS DIRECT

Denver quarterback Tim Tebow reacts leading the Broncos to a playoff win over Pittsburgh on Sunday. US PRESSWIRE

TIM TIME

TEBOW IS THE WORD DURING SUNDAY'S NFL PLAYOFFS

RedEye

Sunday's NFL playoffs can be summed up in one word: Tebow. As in, Tim, quarterback of the Denver Broncos.

Tebow has been front and center since about the midway point of the NFL season, as he took over for the ousted Kyle Orton and led the Broncos to a 7-4 record in their last 11 games, good enough for a berth in the playoffs.

Along the way, all of civilization, it seems, has been obsessed with Tebow. Whether it's his religious beliefs or quarterbacking abilities, he gets people talking. And it's not usually positive.

On Sunday, Tebow led the underdog Broncos against the Pittsburgh Steelers. Could he change people's perceptions of him—at least his quarterbacking's abilities? Let's see.

FIRST QUARTER

The Steelers dominate the first 15 minutes of the game, keeping Tebow and the Broncos off the field for much of the quarter. For his part, Tebow looks out-matched, at the very least.

TEBOW STATS:

Passing: 0-for-2 for 0 yards. Rushing: 1 for 1 yard.

SECOND QUARTER

The quarter starts with a Tebow pass to Eric Decker for 21 yards, then two beautiful passes to put the Broncos up 7-6. On Denver's second series, Tebow connects with Demaryius Thomas for a 58-yarder. Tebow finishes the series with an 8-yard run up the middle for a touchdown.

TEBOW STATS:

Passing: 6-for-10 for 206 yards and 1 touchdown. Rushing: 2 for 12 yards and 1 touchdown.

THIRD QUARTER

In a quarter featuring just three long drives—two by Denver and one by Pittsburgh—Tebow uses his feet, rushing four times, as often as his arm, throwing four times. But the Broncos are kept off the scoreboard.

TEBOW STATS:

Passing: 2-for-4 for 19 yards. Rushing: 4 for 25 yards.

OVERTIME

Tebow needs just one snap and one pass to win it for the Broncos. He hits Thomas with a perfect pass over the middle for an 80-yard touchdown.

TEBOW STATS: Passing: 1-for-1 for 80 yards and one dramatic, 29-23 playoff victory.

FOURTH QUARTER

When Tebow had a chance to put the game away, he badly underthrows an open receiver on third down, giving the ball back to Pittsburgh with 1:37 left with a chance to win the game.

TEBOW STATS:

Passing: 3-for-7 for 39 yards. Rushing: 2 for 13 yards.

For baseball geeks and fantasy players, this is "The Girl With 1 What have we learned from the NFL playoffs so far?

Tim Tebow still runs the ball better than throwing it—and that's not a knock.

Jay Cutler or no Jay Cutler, the Bears wouldn't be able to hang with any of these teams.

Jim Schwartz has some anger issues. Simmer down, crazy pants.

The Texan have a defensive lineman who catches the ball better than all Bears wide receivers.

Denver should sign Drew Brees' birthmark. It's a better long-term QB option than Tebow.

2 If the Bears were in these playoffs ...

... the NFL would have a helluva time trying to figure out a postseason schedule with 13 teams.

... we'd wait a whole extra week before the "Fire Angelo, Fire Lovie" arguments began.

... Jerry Angelo would still have a job. (So there's one plus to being eliminated.)

... c'mon ... that's fantasyland. That would be like naming your baby Blue Ivy.

... the recession would be over. Imagine being able to bet against Hanie/McCown in the playoffs.

3 Why are the Bulls having so much trouble with Atlanta?

Ask the Bears how playing without two of your main players works.

Same problem I have with Atlanta: not enough chicken and waffles.

Kirk Hinrich finally perfected his Derrick Rose voodoo doll.

It's hard to play ball against a team with two Johnsons.

You try playing Game 2 of a back-to-back (or doing anything, for that matter) after a trip to Waffle House.

4 What's behind the Blackhawks' latest struggles?

When in doubt, blame Detroit.

I think the whole "not putting the puck in the net" thing has something to do with it.

Watching too many Charles Barkley Weight Watchers commercials. They think losing is cool.

Attractive Female needs more ice time. She's been on fire in Shoot the Puck this season.

5 Let's hear your BCS title game prediction.

It will not be as good as an NFL playoff game.

Chants of "we need a play-off" will resume the very next day.

I predict no matter what happens, people will still hate the BCS and I'll still prefer the NFL.

Not the game of the century. Fool me once ...

The title will be vacated in 2014 after an NCAA investigation finds major recruiting violations.

FACEOFF

MASCOT MADNESS

LSU'S TIGER VS. ALABAMA'S ELEPHANT

GETTY IMAGES

RedEye

It all comes down to this. The college football season comes to a close in the Superdome in New Orleans on Monday night with LSU and Alabama colliding—again—to decide the national champion. Call it Round 2. The teams met Nov. 5, when the Tigers beat the Crimson Tide 9-6 in overtime. But let's not get lost in statistical analysis and in-depth breakdowns. What we want to see is LSU's tiger mascot vs. Alabama's elephant—elephant?—mascot in a fight to the RedEye-style faceoff death. Go.

Mike the Tiger ☐

NAME

☒ Big Al

After a 6-0 season in 1896, the Tigers nickname was adopted. It is derived from general Robert E. Lee's famous "Louisiana Tigers" battalion.

ORIGIN

☒ A newspaper article in the 1930s called the Alabama line-men "elephants" and it stuck.

1936 ☒

DEBUT

☐ 1979

The current live tiger, Mike VI, is the sixth to represent LSU.

TRIVIA

☒ A student first wore an elephant head in the early 1960s.

OVERALL WINNER

BIG AL. He's unique, we love the name "Al"—short for "Alabama"—and he got his start in a newspaper. Score.

Unlike Mike

Michael Jordan's son Jeff Jordan (left) is not returning to the University of Central Florida

basketball team in the spring semester, the team announced Saturday. "I will not be returning to the UCF basketball team this semester due to personal reasons," Jordan said in a statement. Jeff's brother Marcus is the Knights' leading scorer.

No White House for you

As per tradition, the defending NBA champion Dallas Mavericks visit the White House on Monday, when they'll be recognized by President Obama. Minus Delonte West, though. West has been banned from stepping foot on the grounds because he failed a background check due to a past weapons conviction. "That's what happens when you make bad decisions in your life," West said. LeBron James' mom could not be reached for comment.

MOUTHWATCH

It's kind of ridiculous that because of the way a dog looks, people will ban it. Every kind of dog has good and bad, and that depends on the handlers."

ADVENTURE... in a box?

Board game enthusiasts make hits out of Euro-style pastime

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

Visitors to a recent board game meetup at Lakeview bar Mystic Celt would not have found Risk, Monopoly or any of the other old standbys.

Instead, two dozen game enthusiasts sat hunched over brightly colored boxes with unusual names like Puerto Rico and Alea Iacta Est and spent much of the day exchanging game pieces and rolling dice. They're called Euro-style board games and they're a near weekly habit for Jimmy Smith.

"Someone introduced me to Settlers of Catan in college and I got addicted and starting playing some of the others," said Smith, 30, of Ravenswood. "It's a whole new world of gaming from what we're used to seeing, and it's definitely the best."

Smith isn't the only one in love with Euro-style board games. Settlers of Catan has sold 18 million copies worldwide and is on the brink of becoming a household name. Others, like Dominion or Ticket to Ride, are popping up in stores across the country.

"They're absolutely becoming bigger," said Peter Charnley, assistant manager of Cat & Mouse Game Store in Bucktown, which sells dozens of Euro-style games. "Settlers is still the biggest, but people are buying these games more and more."

Chicagoland Games in Edgewater hosts a weekly Euro-style games night Wednesdays, and one of the store's owners, Nico Sanfiorenzo, gives them credit for the board game making a comeback as one of America's favorite pastimes.

"Euro games do a lot of things right," Sanfiorenzo said. "They last 90 minutes instead of four hours. Some of the older American games, you have situations where people quit after a couple of hours because they know who is going to win and a lot of games come down to luck."

As opposed to the dog-eat-dog world of traditional board games, where you defeat your opponents with military force or send them into the throes of bankruptcy, many Euro-style games encourage collaboration and constructiveness. In Settlers of Catan, the purpose of the game is to collect and trade resources to develop an island. There's no war, and no single player wins or loses until the final turn.

"There's a higher level of creativity and problem solving involved with these games," said Melissa Frichter, 30, of Logan Square, who helps organize Chicago's Boardgame Group, which has approximately 100 to 150 active members, many of them women.

"It's a welcome change," Frichter said. "Strategy board gaming can be a misogynist universe with a bunch of guys who don't think girls can kick their asses, but we're seeing more women in this group."

GET STARTED

Thinking about hopping on the Euro-style board game bandwagon? Here are a few recommended titles to get you started:

Dominion
$44.95

Think of it as a way less nerdy and expensive Magic: The Gathering. It plays similarly to a collectible card game, but there's no extra card buying, is best played with three or four players, and the average game lasts only about 30 minutes.

Settlers of Catan

The proverbial gateway drug of Euro-style games, Settlers is a simple but fun game involving three or four players building roads and settlements, trading resources, buying development cards and racing to earn 10 victory points.

A gamer at Chicagoland Games in Edgewater plays Pandemic, a Euro-style board game.
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

Puerto Rico
$44.95

Players take on the role of colonial governors on the island of Puerto Rico in this three-to-five-player game. Players take turns assuming different roles—trader, builder, craftsman, etc.—and gain victory points by shipping goods or owning buildings.

Carcassonne

Named for the southern French city of Carcassonne famous for its unique fortifications, it's an easy-to-learn medieval tile-laying game where players develop the area around the city and deploy their followers on the roads, cloisters, and in the cities and fields.

Bravo's Cohen says Chicago's turn is coming

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

If you want to know why there's not a "Real Housewives of Chicago," Bravo TV exec Andy Cohen has the answer. Or not.

"That's a good question," Cohen told RedEye in a recent phone interview. "We've done development on a few other things in Chicago, and I'm working on getting a Chicago-based show up and running in the next year. I can't say it will be a 'Housewives,' but we have some other stuff in the hopper."

Prepare for more housewives love as Cohen's "Watch What Happens Live" expands to five nights a week this week. The St. Louis native usually interviews a housewife and another celebrity on the late-night talk show.

He talked about his show, Chicago and his beloved—wait for it—Cardinals.

Person he'd most like to interview: Michelle Obama.

"I think it would be an opportunity for her to have fun, and I think she probably has really strong opinions about pop culture, and I'd love to hear them."

Favorite song by a real housewife: Atlanta housewife Kim Zolciak's song,

"Tardy for the Party." "I think 'Tardy for the Party' is the original jam."

How often he hears from the housewives: "I've gotten a lot of passionate emails over the years and calls. It's called my job. This is my job."

like Frontera Grill."

(Frontera Grill chef Rick Bayless was the winner of the first season "Top Chef Masters" on Bravo.)

Favorite Chicago restaurants: "I love

Stephanie Izard's restaurant, The Girl & the Goat. I

Advice for Cubs fans:

"Cubs fans wouldn't want my advice. Cubs fans are some of the greatest fans in baseball."

ON THE SET OF 'WATCH WHAT HAPPENS LIVE'

Where Ferris Bueller never grows up

I wasn't sure what to expect when I stepped into the Bravo Clubhouse, home of the "Real Housewives" franchise, but I knew there would be cocktails.

The clubhouse, near Greenwich Village in New York, is where host Andy Cohen typically interviews and plays drinking games with a real housewife and a B-list celebrity for his talk show "Watch What Happens Live."

I visited the clubhouse in November to watch what happens (live) on the set of the show, which jumps from two to five episodes this week.

Like any swank clubhouse, Bravo's has a bartender. I asked him for the clubhouse special (not a real thing, but then again neither is a "real housewife") and he gave me a Maker's Mark and soda.

A few minutes before the show aired (typically 10 p.m. in Chicago), about a dozen audience members grabbed their drinks and shuttled onto the small set, which looks much bigger on TV. Maybe the camera adds 10 feet.

The show I attended featured Lisa Vanderpump, the British restaurant owner on "The Real Housewives of Beverly Hills," and Matthew Broderick, best and apparently only known for his turn in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off."

Vanderpump and Ferris reviewed that night's episode of "The Real Housewives of Beverly Hills," engaged in a pingpong competition (Broderick wore an eyepatch to make it fair) and took questions from callers, most of whom didn't realize Ferris Bueller is a movie character and Matthew Broderick is a real human.

Broderick was promoting his role in "Tower Heist," but the joke was on him—especially since Vanderpump dressed her dog Giggy in a Ferris beret. Unfortunately, Sloane was not in attendance. Taping of the show flew by faster than pingpong balls. After it was over, the guests answered more questions from callers and posed for photos.

Meanwhile, I grabbed my cocktail (barely sipped because I like my bourbon on a store shelf and not in my stomach) and thought about spending the rest of my vacation at the Art Institute to save this memory of Ferris.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Three planets are conspiring to juice up your sex life. If you're single, you'll suddenly field offers from interested parties. If you're in a relationship, things will go from ho hum to wow! Enjoy this period of simple, sensual fun.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You could have an unexpected confrontation with a former or current flame as the moon creates sexual melodrama. Maybe your ex wants to complain about your past abuse and dysfunction. Or perhaps your current honey is annoyed by something you're doing.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
Venus is entering your sign for a few weeks, and this will create a second honeymoon feeling if you're already in a relationship. If you're single, you'll feel more confident than you have in a long time, and it should be easy to seduce someone special.

Aries March 21-April 19
Fire signs are all raw passion. The problem is that you lack finesse in the bedroom. Pouncing on your honey is fine, but he or she might like a little sensual foreplay. Uranus says be more attentive.

Taurus April 20-May 20
If you're single, you won't be much longer. If you're in a relationship that has been difficult, expect those tensions to lighten up soon. Mars is bringing a spirit of healing and progress to your most intimate relationships.

Gemini May 21-June 21
Creative Venus is inspiring you to approach love in a new way. If you've been hoping that your dream girl will materialize out of thin air, you'll finally get out and socialize.

Cancer June 22-July 22
An intense full moon is making it obvious that your significant other has room for improvement. You're growing annoyed with your boyfriend's poor housekeeping. Speak up.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
A relationship is feeling odd. You're not sure if it's because you're in a weird place right now or because this person just isn't right for you. Venus says give yourself time to sort things out.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
As Venus moves opposite your sign, you're worried that you've lost your sexual mojo. You're concerned about those extra 10 pounds or you're wondering if your receding hairline will be a dealbreaker with your next lover. Avoid panic.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
Family members or friends could be pressuring you to handle your love life a certain way, thanks to annoying Saturn. But your mom shouldn't be the one deciding whom you marry. And your college roommate isn't qualified to psychoanalyze your girlfriend.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
The moon is inspiring you to make some bold statements. You'll brag to your drinking buddies about all the guys you've slept with or give your girlfriends a detailed description of your latest sexy fling.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Money matters could be making your relationship feel a bit sour. Maybe your honey has been out of work and you've been paying all the bills. The moon says stick together.

Jason Segel superfan Chelsea Gill accompanied "The Muppets" and "Forgetting Sarah Marshall" star to the Chicago Film Critics Awards on Saturday, less than a week after she posted a video of herself on YouTube asking Segel through song to have a drink with her.

"Picture on the way but Chelsea Gill who wrote the awesome song and her twin sister came to the awards tonight," Segel tweeted in the early hours Sunday. "They were the COOLEST!!"

The song, which has been watched more than 175,000 times since being posted Jan. 2, features only Gill and her guitar.

"Oh, Jason Segel, you're the ring to my Smeagol, won't you sing a quirky ballad just for me," Gill sings. "I know you're super busy with Sarah Marshall and Miss Piggy, I swear I'm worth your time just wait and see."

Gill received a response from Segel himself, via Twitter, on Wednesday.

"My favorite thing, maybe ever," Segel

AROUND TOWN

Jason Segel's trip to Chicago also included a stop at Mother's Too in the Gold Coast on Friday (he was by himself and drank Guinness and posed for photos with patrons) and a late-night performance at Second City around 12:45 a.m. Sunday (he took the stage during the third act of "South Side of Heaven").

tweeted about the video. "I am in awe. ... Response on the way—I'm gonna need a couple days on this one."

Segel received the Commedia Extraordinaire Award for contributions to the art of film comedy Saturday during the Chicago Film Critic Awards at the Broadway Playhouse in Water Tower Place.

And yes, he got a drink with Gill.

"Thank you for the drinks," Gill tweeted to Segel on Sunday. "You're a sweetheart!! Best night of my life."

“He’s a really wonderful person. He is so down to earth, sweet, and humble; just a sweetheart.”

—Chelsea Gill, in an email to Luis Gomez, on her night with Jason Segel

ALSO SPOTTED ...

» Cuba Gooding Jr. had dinner at Niu Japanese Fusion Lounge in Streeterville on Friday and hung out with "Red Tails" co-stars Terrence Howard and Nate Parker at Brando's Speakeasy in the Loop and the Underground later that night.

» R. Kelly partied at Angels & Kings in the Hard Rock Hotel on Tuesday and dined at M Burger in Water Tower Place on Dec. 28.

» Jenny McCarthy and the Blackhawks' Duncan Keith had dinner at Japonais on Jan. 2 and Saturday, respectively.

» Former "One Tree Hill" star Chad Michael Murray and Cubs President of Baseball Operations Theo Epstein dined separately at Paris Club on Wednesday. Murray, who was in town to sign copies of his new graphic novel, "Everlast," attended the Bulls game at the United Center on Tuesday, as did the Bears' Matt Forte and Julius Peppers.

» Bill and Giuliana Rancic dined at Joe's Seafood, Prime Steak & Stone Crab on New Year's Day.

LITTLE BABY B!

"Cougar Town" star Busy Philipps (left) and writer Melody Delorshon on Saturday at Racine Plumbing in Lincoln Park.

A toast to 'Cougar Town'

The rogue marketing campaign to bring ABC's "Cougar Town" back to TV hit Chicago on Saturday, and star Busy Philipps was ready to party. "The cast will tell you that I'm the most not like my character," the Oak Park native told the crowd of about 150 fans at Lincoln Park bar Racine Plumbing. "But I'm gonna bring a little bit of Laurie tonight and I'm gonna get drunk!"

» Read a complete account of the event and efforts to keep the show buzzing at showpatroltv.com.

THE DIGIT

$4.2 BILLION

That's how much the "Harry Potter" movies have earned at the box office in the past five years, making Rupert Grint and Emma Watson Hollywood's top-earning screen couple, according to Forbes. Coming in second were Robert Pattinson and Kristen Stewart of the "Twilight" series.

Beyoncé
GETTY IMAGES PHOTOS

Hours after she surprised the world by revealing her pregnancy at the MTV Video Music Awards last year, Beyoncé was on stage performing "Love On Top," and she told the audience: "I want you to feel the love that's growing inside of me."

Now it's her turn to feel the love.

The superstar singer gave birth to a baby girl Saturday, the New York Daily News and (many, many) other news outlets said, reportedly delivering the child—the first for her and for husband Jay-Z—in a private wing of New York's Lenox Hill Hospital. The girl's name was initially reported as "Ivy Blue Carter," then "Blue Ivy Carter." Reps for the couple did not confirm anything Sunday, not even the birth.

“You guys have made my heart happy again.”

—Katy Perry, in a tweet to her fans Saturday, about her breakup with husband Russell Brand. She added: "Concerning the gossip, I want to be clear that NO ONE speaks for me. Not a blog, magazine, 'close sources' or my family."

Happy birthday, Katniss

It's no secret that Kristen Bell is a huge, huge "Hunger Games" fan—she's lobbying for a part in the second and third movies—but she's taken it to the extreme. The geek favorite and "Heroes" star told The Huffington Post she hosted a "Games"-themed blowout for her 30th birthday. "I was head-to-toe in spandex with a fire cape and carried a bow and arrow," she said of her Katniss costume. Was our invite lost in the mail?
